Dominion Government May Purchase Crop

The Dominion Government
may be asked to use its influence to induce the Imperial Government to purchase a substantial quantity of wheat from the farmers of Western Canada running from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 worth. This was the burden of a resolution framed at an assemblage of grain men, farmers' representatives and business men called under the auspices of the Board of Trade, Calgary last Monday, to consider how the farmer could be protected on his prices which were rapidly falling.

The suggestion that the Government be asked to take over the whole crop was laid aside as unfeasible. The resolution was adopted if acted upon it was thought might stiffen prices materially. In addition a resolution was approved asking the Dominion Government to exercise its influence in the collection of seed grain loans. It was agreed that it was reasonable to expect them to be paid out of the proceeds of this year's bumper crop.

Kitchener Will Say If Conscription is Necessary

Lord Cromer gives reasons in The Times why he deprecates conscription. He says:

"In the first place, I think that whatever may be my personal opinions, my support would at present do more harm than good. It would tend not to ally, but rather to accentuate the class controversy with which we are manifestly threatened and which we should,
above all things, endeavour to avoid."

"In the second place, it is obviously not impossible that the acute differences of opinion which exist on this subject may break up the present coalition and this in my opinion would be disastrous. It is essential that unity be preserved, even at the expense of great sacrifice of personal opinion on the part of many."

"In the third place, I think this is exclusively a question approach which the Government, which has full information, on the subject, should give the lead. When I say the Government I mean more especially Lord Kitchener."

"Circumstances have forced him into a position which is all together unique. If he were to state publicly that conscription is necessary, my belief is that support of the mass of the public would be at once secured."

"On the other hand, I should regard it as not merely unwise, but practically hopeless to endeavour to enforce conscription
if Lord Kitchener were to adopt a hostile or even neutral attitude. There never was a cen-surer when his it appears to me deserve the epithet of golden."

Mrs. J. H. Alexander and the Misses Alexander returned to town on Saturday morning
after spending a very pleasant vacation in Ontario.

It is reported that Major W.
W. Nesmith will shortly organize a regiment for active service.

Letters to the Editor

Note: The News accepts no responsibility for the opinions of correspondents published as communications to the Editor.

Kimmudly, Alta.,

July 26th., '15.

Editor Oyen News,
Oyen, Alta.

Dear Sir:—

In a recent issue of your paper you included a couple of winner numbers. One of them was your very prominent "Vote No" advertisement. Any paper that would print such stuff (either free or for pay) is unworthy a place in any decent home. Therefore, you may keep your paper to yourself, and any future copies coming to me will be returned, unopened and at your cost.

The other number was your editorial headed: "Killing No Murder". In there you speak of the "righteous indignation of the vast majority of American citizens against Germany". If you really know, from observation or experience, what is the feeling of the States people (the majority) you would know it to be a feeling, constantly deepening, that the hands of both sides are equally red. Nor can any extent of flag waving or denunciation from either side's partisans convince them to the contrary. You speak so confidently of the "vast majority". This "vast majority" of the people in the States consider that, from either side, if war is only and simply murder, with only the murderer's most common motive,—hated.

Again, without discussing the merits, real or supposed of either the Allies or the Germans claims and demands, you seem to have evolved that the only excuse for a nation's continued neutrality is in order that it may serve the needs of the Allies. This may seem alright from your viewpoint; but you will have to "go some" to demonstrate it to them. And, fortunately for the cause you seek to champion, your paper has practically no circulation in the States. Should you consent to free yourself from excessive prejudice, you could, at once, see that the United States is essentially a free nation, and no subject of either of the warring nations; and, as a free, peace-loving, neutral nation, they are properly, under obligation to furnish ammunition and supplies to neither Germany or the Allies. This is true neutrality, and this is the States proper place. This is the view of that vast majority in the States, and also Bryan's; and Bryan's present stand will be well and honorably mentioned by posterity when you and I are long forgotten. Also, do not deceive yourself into the belief that it is their sympathy for the Allies or their cause that is inducing a certain class to serve them in the States. It is for money and money alone.

You also speak of the States' illogical position. While we are British subjects, it is no part of being good British subjects to hypnotize ourselves into the belief that all else but the rankest British or French partizanship is illogical in any nation. There is no issue at stake in this war that can justify the States entry into it at present. And as to violations of neutrality, they have suffered alike from both sides. So, for the interest of the cause you seek to champion, you would do well to recall that, while Canada is a colony of Great Britain, and therefore Canadians are British subjects, the States are not, nor do they seek to be a colony of Great Britain; nor are the States people eager to become British subjects, as shown in 1775 and 1812. Also the States has her own interests to look after the same as Germany, England, France, Austria, Turkey, Russia, or even Canada, and they all, without a single exception, are working for self and self alone, as will be shown by the peace treaty, regardless of which side wins.

Yours truly,
Postmaster,
Kimmudly.

The above letter was received by us a few days ago. The issue referred to was published on July 16th.

The "Vote No" advertisement. We have no apology to make for the publication of this advertisement. The hotelmen were fighting for their existence and the temperance party fighting to oust them. Was it not right to give both sides an opportunity to advance their arguments?

"Killing No Murder."

Why should the "Post Master, Kimmudly" be so agitated because we spoke of the "righteous indignation of the vast majority of American citizens against Germany" and why does he so vehemently state that the feeling of the States people is that the hands of both sides are equally red, is he giving us his own views under the cloak of "the States people"? We wonder!

If the present position of the States is not as illogical one we should like to know just what our correspondent would consider an illogical position. Perhaps he does not understand the meaning of the word.

Since the first note sent by Wilson to Berlin, which clearly stated that "if the commanders of German vessels of war should destroy on the high seas an American vessel or the lives of American citizens, it would be difficult for the United States to view the act in any other light than as an indefensible violation of neutral rights," several "indefensible violations of neutral rights" have been indulged in by German commanders, and the situation becomes more illogical with each new outrage.

Peace talk, and true neutrality are very well in their place, but this is neither the time nor place for their successful working. There can be no true peace or no true neutrality until the German war machine is crushed or over.

However much an individual or a nation may strive to be truly neutral, they cannot succeed, in the present great struggle one must be either for or against the allies; there can be no such thing as true neutrality.

Our correspondent would have us believe that the vast majority of the people in the States consider that the hands of both sides are equally red, and the war considered from either side is simply murder, with only the murderers most common motive,—hated,—at the back of it. This is of course the wildest tommy-no. One has only to read the history of events leading up to the present European struggle to that such is not the case. Russia and France had war forced upon them as had poor Belgium. It was either war or extinction with these nations. Britain was not actually attacked but she was appealed to by Belgium to protect her. Germany in her arrogance scorned Britain's ultimatum. Britain took up the sword for a great principal and no country ever entered a war with cleaner hands or for a more righteous cause.

If the editorials of the leading periodicals and newspapers of the States are a criterion of the feeling of the people, our correspondent's statement is not difficult to disprove.

The sentiment of his letter does not commend itself to us.

Why an Embargo?

There will be no embargo on shipment of war munitions from this country. The activities of our pro-German friends to that

Duck Seasons Opens

Messrs. Steffensen, Kelly, Lees and Dunford left town yesterday at four a. m. and returned shortly after eight with a good bag.

Wm. Rennie and Clarence Peterson were also early risers and participated in the first shoot of the season.

The cannonading south of town sounded like thunder and the ducks flew like lightning.

"Well" says he counted 2,750 fling from one slough. We think he missed one or two however.

All the little ducks went "quack, quack, quack!"

And one could not wonder at it. A most mysterious looking object was seen in Alexander's slough round about breakfast time. In size it was too small to be a hippopotamus and too large to be a duck. Distant observers were unable to determine what it was, but the appearance in town at a later hour of a much bearded individual with the knee of his pants torn and both barrels of his gun half full of alkali mud possibly accounted for this unusual phenomenon.

Italians For The Dardanelles

In the meantime Italy has apparently shouldered the task of which the Italian States have been fighting shy. She is expected to furnish the men for an overland attack on Constantinople, and it would appear that the men are all ready on their way to the scene of endeavor.

On the western front the only change noted is an extension of the line held by the British to two, or perhaps three times its former length. This is held to mean that the British forces in France now approach 800,000 men. It very probably has something to do, also with the increased French activity in Alsace, and with the success of the French in repelling the attacks made by the Germans in the direction of Verdun and the Argonne. The peril of Verdun has always necessitated the presence in that district of larger French forces than are needed on other parts of the line, and if the Germans are to resume the offensive in the West (as late as July Gen. Bernhardt thought they would) Verdun is almost certain to be the scene of their principle effort.

The Arabic Atrocity

The shiking of the Arabic was interpreted in the newspapers and still more on the stock exchange, as bringing a breach between Germany and the United States within sight. But on Wednesday the stock exchange showed clearly that this expectation had been abandoned again, the German Government having given the broadest hint consistent with the tenets of stiff-lipped diplomacy that shiking ships without warning was outside its intention. While the scare lasted, however, it served to show quite conclusively that the body of opinion ready to face such a contingency without regret, to put it mildly, has obtained an enormous extension in the past few months.

Already proposals to make radical changes in the strength of the army and of the Navy, with a view to the possibility of actual defence of the country, have been accorded general acceptance in advance of being formally put forward.

and are so much lost labor. If there was ever any doubt on that subject the Lusitania removed the doubt. This country might prohibit the exportation of war supplies in a case where its sympathies were so strongly attached to the country against which they were used that it was different to an appearance of neutrality. But to deprive this country will cast aside neutrality in favor of the belligerent that sank the Lusitania is absurd.

To put an embargo on war shipments would, in the circumstances, be tantamount to a declaration of opinion that the Allies ought to be beaten. S.E.P.

The Influence of War on Forestry

There is one effect of war which has escaped general observation—the destruction of forests. It will be perceived that the most sanguinary and strenuous engagements are taking place in the most thickly timbered stretches of country, particularly on the western battle-front, such as the Vosges and the Ardennes. In modern military strategy the occupation of thickly timbered territory is a frequent occurrence. The reason is obvious. Densely wooded country offers the greatest obstruction to an enemy. The roads and trails are few, and may be easily blocked. When these highways are rendered impassable artillery cannot be moved quickly and strategically. If highways have to be blazed and cleared to permit the movement of troops and gun time is lost, as such work is necessary slow. The trees are of paramount value to the surrounding country, because of their influence on the

The South Wales miners seem to hold the winning card; there seems little doubt that the Government will now have to do what its own friends vigorously urged it to do at the outset of the trouble, namely, take control of the mines as it took control of the railways and factories. Coal is as necessary as munitions and if in private hands it cannot be supplied as the needs of the nation demand the nation must look to itself and act on the principle "safety first."

rainfall and the deposit of moisture. Consequently, on the conclusion of the war some interesting problems will arise. Unless this wastage is made good by a liberal policy of afforestation the agricultural land in the vicinity will become sterile.

American Statement Called Ridiculous

German naval officials say that the statement made in an American publication that Germany has lost 50 submarines is ridiculous, as also is the statement credited to British sources placing the number at 38. The naval men do not deny that the British have had successes against the submarines, but they say that they have been nothing like such figures.

THE FIGHTING

We all feel the better for having told that the British are now holding a hundred miles of that murderous line in France and Flanders. This indicates that a larger part of "Kitchener's army" is in the field, and that the terrible strain upon the greatly extended and gallant French forces has been to some extent relieved. For a while, there was a tendency in private circles to take a pessimistic tone regarding the ability of the Western line to repel any determined German "drive" toward some one coveted point. We were even told that they could and probably would get to Calais. That sort of pessimism is now all gone. We confidently believe that the Western line will hold under any sort of pounding and that the fattening up of both the French and the British exactions ensure small defeats against becoming great disasters.

The reason we are not hearing of any vigorous and general aggressive movement by the Allied armies in this section, is becoming more obvious. The Allies have a larger strategy, which does not include wasting men against the cement trenches of the Germans in the West. This strategy seems now to be concentrating upon a determined attack upon the Dardanelles. The British and French have had large armies there for some time. They have lately been reinforced, and probably more men are there or thereabouts than the censor permits us to know. And now Italy is shipping off a huge army, apparently to this point. Whether or not the Balkans continue to balk, we may look for heavy fighting on the Gallipoli peninsula before long—Montreal Star.

Arise, Sir Samuel!

The German have had their "Day"; now we have our "Knight".

Madness to think Germans can win, says Swiss Socialist paper. Trouble is the Germans are mad enough to think anything.

The Germans found the Russians at Bay in the Gulf of Riga.

The United States are putting 800,000,000 into new submarine boats. Perhaps Wilson is only too proud to fight until he is good and ready.

We gather from German opinion on the sinking of the Arabic:

The Germans didn't do it. If they did, it was a mistake. If they didn't, it would have been quite right if they had.

If they did, was the fault of the English and of the Americans who were on the vessel—Saskatoon Starbeams.

Germany denies that Von Moltke has been sunk. Exactly. She merely went to the bottom of the sea in a moment of temporary aberration, mistaking herself for a submarine.
